

THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

1997-05-30

1 dear bahá'í friends,

The expansion of the bahá'í community and the growing complexity of 2 the issues which are facing National Spiritual Assemblies in certain countries have brought the cause to a new stage in its development. They have caused

3 us in recent years to examine various aspects of the balance between cen-

4 tralization and decentralization. in a few countries we have authorized the 5 National Spiritual Assemblies to establish State bahá'í councils or regional 249.8

252 58Teaching and Administrative committees. from the experience gained in 253 the operation of these bodies, and from detailed examination of the prin-

254 ciples set forth by Shoghi effendi, we have reached the conclusion that the 255 time has arrived for us to formalize a new element of bahá'í administration, 256 between the local and national levels, comprising institutions of a special kind, to be designated as “r egional bahá'í councils.”

257 regional bahá'í councils will be brought into being only with our per-258 mission and only in countries where conditions make this step necessary. Nevertheless, we find it desirable to inform all National Spiritual Assemblies of the nature of this historic development, and to make clear its place in the 259 evolution of national and local bahá'í institutions.

260 The institutions of the Administrative order of bahá'u'lláh, rooted in 261 the provisions of his revelation, have emerged gradually and organically, as 262 the bahá'í community has grown through the power of the divine impulse

263 imparted to humankind in this age. The characteristics and functions of 264 each of these institutions have evolved, and are still evolving, as are the relationships between them. The writings of the beloved guardian expound

265 the fundamental elements of this mighty System and make it clear that the Administrative order, although different in many ways from the world

266 order which it is the destiny of the bahá'í revelation to call into being, 267 is both the "nucleus" and "pattern" of that world order. Thus, the evolu-268 tion of the institutions of the Administrative order, while following many 269 variants to meet changing conditions in different times and places, should strictly follow the essential principles of bahá'í administration which have 270 been laid down in the Sacred Text and in the interpretations provided by 'Abdu'l-b ahá and the guardian.

one of the subtle qualities of the bahá'í Administrative order is the 271 balance between centralization and decentralization. This balance must be 272 correctly maintained, but different factors enter into the equation, depend-273 ing upon the institutions involved. for example, the relationship between 274 a National or local Spiritual Assembly and its committees is of a different nature from that between National and local Spiritual Assemblies. The 275 former is a relationship between a central administrative body and "its as-sisting organs of executive and legislative action," 276 250-1 while the latter is a 277 relationship between national and local levels of the house of justice, each 252 58of which is a divinely ordained institution with clearly prescribed jurisdic-

253 tion, duties and prerogatives.

254 regional bahá'í councils partake of some, but not all, characteristics

255 of Spiritual Assemblies, and thus provide a means of carrying forward the teaching work and administering related affairs of a rapidly growing bahá'í community in a number of situations. without such an institution, the 256 development of a national committee structure required to cover the needs in some countries would run the danger of over-complexity through adding a further layer of committees under the regional committees, or the danger of excessive decentralization through conferring too much autonomy on 257 committees which are characterized by the guardian as "bodies that should 258 be regarded in no other light than that of expert advisers and executive 259 assistants.

260 The distinguishing effects of the establishment of regional bahá'í coun-261 cils are the following:

- it provides for a level of autonomous decision making on both teaching and administrative matters, as distinct from merely executive action, below the National Assembly and above the local Assemblies.

- it involves the members of local Spiritual Assemblies of the area in the choice of the members of the council, thus reinforcing the 263 bond between it and the local believers while, at the same time, bringing into public service capable believers who are known to the friends in their own region.

- it establishes direct consultative relationships between the continental counselors and the regional bahá'í councils.

- it offers the possibility of forming a regional bahá'í council in an ethnically distinct region which covers parts of two or more countries. in such a situation the council is designated to work directly under one of the National Assemblies involved, providing 265 copies of its reports and minutes to the other National Assembly.

- The greater degree of decentralization involved in the devolution of authority upon regional bahá'í councils requires a corresponding increase in the capacity of the National Spiritual Assembly itself to keep fully informed of what is proceeding in all parts of 266 the territory over which it has ultimate jurisdiction.

267 for those National Spiritual Assemblies which have already established 268 regional bahá'í councils or regional Teaching and Administrative com-250.5

253 ing the formation and functioning of regional bahá'í councils. for the 254 sake of simplicity, we have used the designation "r egional bahá'í councils"

255 throughout, but the actual name used will, as heretofore, vary from country to country, including such names as "State bahá'í councils," "p rovincial

256 bahá'í councils" or, when referring to an individual council, "The bahá'í 257 council for . . ." etc. To avoid the confusion of thought which seems to have been caused by referring to "r egional Teaching and Administrative 258 committees," we have decided to cease using this designation and to refer to these bodies as bahá'í councils formed by appointment rather than elec-

259 tion. we shall be writing separately to these National Spiritual Assemblies, 260 indicating what modifications, if any, they should now make to the existing structures.

261 it is our ardent prayer at the Sacred Threshold, that the establishment of 262 regional bahá'í councils will greatly enhance the ability of the Administra-

263 tive order to deal with the complex situations with which it is confronted 264 in a number of countries at the present time, and thus carry forward, with 265 increased vigor, the propagation of the cause of g od.

4 of National Assemblies not to serve on councils,

5 whether these be elected or appointed bodies.

2.2 regional bahá'í councils formed by election:

2.2 1 The members of an elected regional bahá'í

3 council, who shall be nine in number, are elected from among all the adult believers in the region by the members of the local Spiritual Assemblies in that region every year on 23 may, the anniversary of the declaration of the báb according to the gregorian calendar, or on a weekend immediately vention and the elections of the regional bahá'í 250.11 marily by mail, through methods to be decided by the National Spiritual Assembly. The voting is to be by secret ballot. The members of the lo-253 cal Spiritual Assemblies may send in their ballots individually or they may be collected by the Secretary of the local Spiritual Assembly and mailed 254 together.

2.2 3 i f feasible and desirable, an electoral meeting,

3 or several electoral meetings, may be held in the region for those voters able to attend, in order to provide an occasion for members of local Spiritual Assemblies in the region to consult about the 4 progress of the cause. other believers may attend, 5 but would not take part in the voting.

2.2 4 i f there is a tie vote, the tie is to be broken by lot,

3 in view of the impracticability of holding a revote in such a situation.

2.2 5 Any vacancy on a regional bahá'í council should be filled by the person who had the next highest number of votes on the ballot in the preceding 3 election.

2.2 6 Auxiliary board members are not eligible for ser-

3 vice on a r egional b ahá'í council.

2.2 7 The result of the election is to be confirmed by the 3 National Spiritual Assembly.

2.3 2 b allotting takes place among members of local Spiritual Assemblies in the region, similarly to that for the election of a regional bahá'í coun-

3 The Functions of Regional Bahá'í Councils:

4 The functions of a regional bahá'í council and the degree of authority

5 conferred upon it are within the discretion of a National Spiritual Assem-

6 bly. however, they should not be limited to those of a national or regional

7 committee for, in such a case, there would be no justification for bringing into being a regional bahá'í council rather than appointing a national or 8 regional committee. The functions and responsibilities generally envisaged for a regional bahá'í council are as follows:

3.1 To carry out the policies of the National Spiritual Assembly and to supervise, on behalf of the National Assembly, the smooth and efficient execution of the plans and projects for 4 its region.

3.2 To keep the National Spiritual Assembly regularly informed of the council's activities and of the conditions of the faith throughout the region. regional bahá'í councils are allowed 4 to develop their own strategies and programs, and to carry out their day-to-day work without having to obtain further approval from the National Spiritual Assembly. however, through their frequent reports and the minutes of their meetings, the National Assembly is kept informed of their activi-

5 ties and maintains its overall supervision of the affairs of the cause in all parts of the country.

3.3 To take initiative in the promotion of the faith in the region

4 and to carry out its decisions within the range of authority vested in it by the National Assembly. The National Assembly allows the council a wide latitude for autonomous action,

5 intervening in its work only in matters which the Assembly regards as being of major importance. The main task of a regional bahá'í council is to devise and execute expansion and consolidation plans in close collaboration with the local 6 Spiritual Assemblies and the believers within its area of juris-diction. its goal is to create strong local Spiritual Assemblies which will be the focal centers of bahá'í activity, will exercise their vitally important role in the development of the faith

7 and will demonstrate their ability to regulate the affairs of their local communities.250.14 the region including the appointment of committees for issues within its terms of reference, such as external affairs and the translation, publication and distribution of bahá'í 253 literature.

3.4 1 i n the area of teaching, a regional bahá'í council

4 may be given authority by the National Assem-bly to appoint, direct and supervise the work of a number of area or district teaching committees. in those cases where a regional bahá'í council has 5 to carry out a wide range of functions, it may also be authorized by the National Spiritual Assembly to appoint a regional teaching committee to be responsible to it for the teaching work in the region

6 as a whole and for the direction and supervision of the area or district teaching committees.

3.4 2 A regional bahá'í council may be asked by the 4 National Spiritual Assembly to arrange and super-vise the unit elections for delegates to the national convention.

3.4 3 The working relationship between the local Spiri-council will depend upon the range of functions and responsibilities conferred by the National Assembly upon the council. in any case the author-of the national plan within the framework of each worldwide 253 plan.

3.7 To devise, for the approval of the National Assembly, its own 4 expansion and consolidation programs for the achievement of the plan for its region, within the overall framework of the 5 national plan.

3.8 To formulate an annual budget for the region, in consultation with the counselors or their deputies when advisable, and to submit this budget to the National Spiritual Assembly for its approval.

3.8 1 Alternatively, should the conditions indicate the advisability of such a method, the annual budgets of regional bahá'í councils may be specified by 4 the National Spiritual Assembly.

3.9 To administer the budget for the region, sending regular reports and financial statements to the National Spiritual 4 Assembly.

3.10 A regional bahá'í council can be authorized by the National 4 Spiritual Assembly to act as its agent in operating a regional branch of the national bahá'í fund. in this respect the coun-

5 cil may perform the following functions.

3.10 1 i t encourages believers within its region to contribute to various funds of the cause, including 4 the regional branch of the national fund, with the aim that, in due course, the entire expenditure for the region would be provided by the believers in the region.

3.10 2 i f the whole of the budgeted expenditure for a 4 year cannot be met by contributions from the believers in the region, the council may apply to the National Spiritual Assembly for an allocation

5 from the national b ahá'í fund.

3.10 3 i t is also within the discretion of the counselors to allocate financial assistance to a regional bahá'í

3.11 1 i f, because of local conditions, the universal house of justice authorizes certain regional 4 bahá'í councils to correspond directly with it, copies of all such correspondence should be sent 5 to the National Assembly.

3.11 2 copies of the Bahá'í International News Service and of certain circular letters may be mailed from the bahá'í world center directly to all regional 4 bahá'í councils.

3.11 3 when regional bahá'í councils publish bahá'í literature or regional newsletters, copies of such publications should be sent directly to the bahá'í world center under the same guidelines as apply

4 to national bahá'í publications.

3.11 4 Although, in general, regional bahá'í councils can be authorized to correspond directly with the world center in order to share current informa-

4 tion about the activities of their respective communities, this should not be misconstrued as a means to bypass the institution of the National 5 Spiritual Assembly in matters requiring guidance or decision.

3.12 i n most countries the legal status of regional bahá'í councils

4 would seem to be adequately covered by the National Assembly's incorporation.

3.13 Just as counselors have direct consultative relations with National and local Spiritual Assemblies, so they also have direct 4 relations with regional bahá'í councils.

3.13 1 whenever the counselors feel it necessary or desirable, they are free to deputize one or more Auxiliary board members to represent them in con-

4 sultations with a regional bahá'í council. Also,

5 occasional meetings should be arranged between a regional bahá'í council and the Auxiliary board

4 National Committees in the New Structure:

5 it is advisable for a National Spiritual Assembly to have a National Teaching

6 committee even if regional bahá'í councils are formed in every part of a 7 country. The functions of the National Teaching committee in a country in 8 which regional bahá'í councils have been established are as follows.

4.1 The guardian has referred to national committees as expert

5 advisers and executive assistants of a National Spiritual Assembly. This suggests that, rather than diminishing the role of its National Teaching committee when regional bahá'í

6 councils are formed, a National Spiritual Assembly would develop further the advisory and executive aspects of its re-sponsibilities in certain respects. The capacity of the National Teaching committee to monitor the effectiveness of the 7 teaching work throughout the country could be enhanced. Through its knowledge of the progress of the work, it should be able to bring to the National Assembly's attention strengths and needs in any region. There are also a number of specific matters, such as the analysis of opportunities for 8 expansion and consolidation in rapidly changing conditions, the identification of successful approaches to teaching, and the dissemination of promising teaching methods, which 9 would benefit from the constant attention of a vibrant and competent National Teaching committee. issues related to teaching among minorities and specific groups who reside in more than one region of the country present another area which would benefit from a National Teaching committee's 10 attention.

4.2 The work of the National Teaching committee in relation

5 to regional bahá'í councils is one of service and assistance,

6 rather than direction and supervision as it is in relation to regional teaching committees. A parallel can be seen in the work of a national training institute, to which the National

7 Assembly assigns the task of developing human resources: the institute assists the councils by offering them programs 250.28

250 29

252 59for the training of the human resources needed to carry out their plans in each region. The National Teaching committee would, similarly, offer services to the councils in support of 253 the teaching work.

4.3 i n countries where regional bahá'í councils have been introduced only for certain areas, the National Teaching committee is expected to perform not only the functions

5 outlined above, but also to remain responsible, both directly and through its regional Teaching committees, for serving those areas not under the care of a council. in carrying out

6 such functions there must, of course, be close collaboration between the National Teaching committee and its regional Teaching committees on the one hand, and the regional 7 bahá'í councils on the other.

4.4 i n the case of all national committees, it is important to en-

5 sure that legitimate national programs do not run counter to the process of decentralization, except in special emergency 6 situations.
