To an individual believer

1 dear bahá'í friend,

2 1996, and appreciates your clearly heartfelt concern that reports of Assemblies should be presented in ways which are in accordance with bahá'í

3 standards of propriety and that any suggestion of electioneering be avoided.

4 it has asked us to send you the following reply.

5 electioneering is a practice foreign to the spirit of bahá'í administra-

6 tion. however, it is necessary to distinguish between electioneering and

7 those activities which should be entirely natural and normal in bahá'í

8 communities. bahá'ís travel and teach the faith, they go pioneering,

9 they represent the faith in relation to non-bahá'í agencies, they serve in 10 positions of responsibility. There is no reason why such services should be carried on anonymously. bahá'í voters have to acquire the maturity

11 to estimate the character and true capacities of their fellow-believers, to 12 be able to distinguish between a person who is self-sacrificingly serving the cause with all due modesty, and one whose activities are carried out

13 with the primary purpose of bringing himself or herself to the attention of the friends.231.4

234 bahá'ís, nevertheless, are subject to all the pressures and standards of the

235 prevalent culture of the society in which they live, and can only too easily

236 be unconsciously influenced in their behavior by the accepted norms of that

237 culture. one of our challenging tasks as bahá'ís, however, is to establish,

238 through our personal conduct and through the pattern of life in our communities and institutions, those cultural standards which bahá'u'lláh wishes

239 us to uphold. in a description of the characteristics of those who are called 240 upon to serve in bahá'í administrative institutions, Shoghi effendi says:

They should never be led to suppose that they are the central ornaments of the body of the cause, intrinsically superior to others in 241 capacity or merit, and sole promoters of its teachings and principles.

They should approach their task with extreme humility, and endeav-

242 or, by their open-mindedness, their high sense of justice and duty, 243 their candor, their modesty, their entire devotion to the welfare and interests of the friends, the cause, and humanity, to win, not only the confidence and the genuine support and respect of those whom they 244 serve, but also their esteem and real affection.

(Bahá'í Administration: Selected Messages 1922–1932

(Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 197), p. 6.)

245 As such attitudes and standards become, ever more clearly, the norm of 246 bahá'í society, the friends will have little difficulty in distinguishing among 247 their fellow-believers those who are worthy of their votes.

with this understanding, the inclusion of the names of the members of 248 the National Spiritual Assembly and of the members of its various com-

249 mittees in its Annual report is natural and has been a normal practice of 250 National Spiritual Assemblies during the lifetime of Shoghi effendi and

251 ever since. likewise it is normal, in writing reports in general, to include

252 the names of believers who have rendered particular services, even though it is not possible to mention every person who has contributed to the 253 achievement.

254 one of the believers wrote to the guardian asking how the friends could

255 know for whom to vote as delegates from their electoral district. in the reply

256 written on behalf of the guardian on 25 march 1949, his secretary said:

257 “the friends, through regional newsletters, National News-letter, confer-ences and association with each other, can get to know other bahá'ís in their 232.3

state, and become familiar enough with their services and qualifications to vote for their delegates intelligently.” it can be seen from this that the 236

guardian expected the activities of the friends to be reported, and expected the b ahá’ís to be alert to the qualities and services of their fellow-believers.

237

238

The house of justice trusts that these explanations have helped to assuage your concern and assisted you in your evaluation of the activities of the various friends. it was very happy to note your eager response to the call of the four year plan and asks us to assure you of its prayers in the holy

239

240

241

242

Shrines for the confirmation of your endeavors on behalf of the cause.

243

with loving b ahá’í greetings,

for Department of the secretariat
