

THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

1999-11-26

To the b ahá'ís of the w orld

1 dearly loved f riends, on this special day, when our hearts and thoughts are focused on the

2 immortal example set by the life of the center of the covenant, we pause

3 to note, with feelings of deep gratitude, the current progress of the divine

4 plan which he conceived, and to glance at the future beyond the four-year stage now rapidly coming to an end.312.1

315 695The accomplishments during this period are encouraging indeed. An

316 impressive network of training institutes on a scale but dimly imagined

317 at the start of the plan has been established throughout the world. These 318 nascent centers of learning have made significant strides in developing for-

319 mal programs and in putting into place effective systems for the delivery of courses.
reports indicate that the number of believers benefiting directly

320 from training courses has climbed to nearly 100,000. without question, the 321 capacity of the worldwide community to develop its human resources has been distinctly enhanced.

The effects of this systematic approach to human resource development

322 are making themselves felt in the lives of all three protagonists of the plan—

323 the individual believer, the institutions, and the local community. There has been an upsurge in teaching activities undertaken at the initiative of the 324 individual. Spiritual Assemblies, councils, and committees have grown in 325 their ability to guide the believers in their individual and collective endeav-

326 ors. And community life has flourished, even in localities long dormant, as new patterns of thought and behavior have emerged.

327 As we survey the bahá'í world, we see a greatly strengthened community, 328 internally sound and notably reinforced. its achievements in reaching the 329 general public, governments and organizations of civil society and in win-ning trust in all these circles are striking. Agencies specialized in external 330 affairs, following a well-defined strategy, have broadened the range of the 331 faith's influence nationally and internationally, and projects of social and 332 economic development, which seek the spiritual and material upliftment of 333 entire communities, are penetrating society at the grassroots.

The two stages in the unfoldment of the divine plan lying immedi-

334 ately ahead will last one year and five years respectively. At riḡván 2000 335 the bahá'í world will be asked to embark on the first of these two stages, a 336 twelve-month effort aimed at concentrating the forces, the capacities and 337 the insights that have so strongly emerged. The five year plan that fol-338 lows will initiate a series of worldwide enterprises that will carry the bahá'í 339 community through the final twenty years in the first century of the faith's 340 formative Age. These global plans will continue to focus on advancing the 341 process of entry by troops and on its systematic acceleration.
342 it is essential that, during the one-year effort, national and regional in-343 stitutes everywhere bring into full operation the programs and systems that they have now devised. National communities should enter the five year

344 plan confident that the acquisition of knowledge, qualities and skills of ser-313.2

315 696 vice by large contingents of believers, with the aid of a sequence of courses, 316 will proceed unhindered. Ample attention must also be given to further 317 systematization of teaching efforts, whether undertaken by the individual or 318 directed by the institutions. in this respect, the international Teaching center has identified certain patterns of systematic expansion and consolidation for relatively small geographical areas consisting of a manageable number of localities. Through the collaboration of counselors and National Spiritual Assemblies, several "Area growth programs" are being established in each continent. They will be carefully monitored during the T twelve month plan and their methods will be refined so that this approach can be incorporated into subsequent plans.

Strategies to advance the process of entry by troops cannot ignore children and junior youth, if the victories won in one generation are not to be lost with the passage of time. It is imperative, then, that at this point in the process of systematization of the teaching work, definite steps be taken to ensure that the vision of the community fully embraces its younger members. The education of children, an obligation enjoined on both parents and institutions, requires special emphasis so as to become thoroughly integrated into the process of community development. This activity should be taken to new levels of intensity during these twelve months and then be further raised in the years immediately after. That the programs of most institutes in the world provide for the training of children's class teachers represents an element of strength. Spiritual Assemblies and Auxiliary board members will need to mobilize these newly trained human resources to meet the spiritual requirements of children and junior youth.

The period of the T twelve month plan will be marked by great activity in society at large as the twentieth century draws to a close. Already keen interest is being shown by leaders of thought in the destiny of the coming generations, and we hope that the fervor of the bahá'í community, both in its internal operation and its interactions with society, will convey a sense of confidence in the future of humanity.

we will pray ardently in the holy Shrines that bahá'u'lláh will bless your exertions to bring the four year plan to a triumphal conclusion.

with loving bahá'í greetings,
