To two individual b ahá'ís

dear b ahá'í f riends, in your letter of 15 September 1992 regarding the manner of appealing to the youth and of involving them in bahá'í activities, particularly with respect to the youth year of service, and we have been directed to convey the following.

The house of justice sympathizes with your view that undue pressure should not be put on the youth to induce them to engage in activities of a youth year of service, and it certainly would not be in accord with the purposes of the faith to require youth to abandon their academic training so as to teach or otherwise serve the faith. many factors bear on the various points you have raised; these must be understood by both youth and par-ents, and of course by members of bahá'í institutions. for example, every bahá'í, whether youth or adult, has spiritual duties and obligations in com-mon; among these is the duty prescribed by bahá'u'lláh to the individual to teach his faith, a duty which he describes as the “most meritorious of all deeds” and in which he urges us to be “unrestrained as the wind.”

so, the youth must be knowledgeable of the emphasis which bahá'u'lláh places on education and the acquisition of skills, and they should regard the pursuit of these objectives as a service to g od.

particular challenges must be met by the youth, parents, and the bahá'í institutions in relation to their respective responsibilities. f or instance:

- The youth face the pressing obligation of completing their educa-tion so as to acquire a profession or trade while at the same time observing their other spiritual obligations and duties to g od.
- p arents have the responsibility of ensuring that their children are educated and, to the extent possible, must provide the material support for their academic or vocational training up through their youthful years; parents also continue during this period to offer of the times and to point out the crucial importance of the action of the individual to the fortunes of the faith and humanity as a whole.

Along with all these considerations is the factor of the special role which the youth, with their particular qualities of enthusiasm and idealism, play in the development of the cause. This has been evident from the earliest days of the faith and is indispensable to its ultimate triumph. A cursory review of bahá'í history provides many examples of the heroic deeds of youth, and today's bahá'í youth cannot help but be inspired by such heroism to also play their part in their own time before they become burdened with the cares of adult life.

in some circumstances, however much a youth may wish to respond to a call to bahá'í service of a particular kind, he may not be able to do so because he may be in the midst of important academic training that cannot 141.3c □01and should not be postponed, he may be dependent on parents who cannot afford to assist him materially both to take time out to engage in a year of service and to return to his academic pursuits later on, or there may be other obstacles. Then there are circumstances in which a youth may find that by postponing his academic training for a time, he is better able to determine exactly what to do with his life, if during this time he can make some useful contribution to the faith or to society. There are numerous examples of such circumstances among bahá'í youth who have found that by engaging in activities of the youth year of service, they were able not only to make valuable contributions to the teaching of the faith or to development projects, but were also able to make up their minds about their life's work. There are also many youth who prefer to complete their education before offering special services to the faith, and this is entirely in order.

The preeminent point drawn from your letter is the importance of balance in judgment and action. The members of the bahá'í institutions cannot escape their duty to urge and stimulate the friends, adult and youth, to serve the cause, especially in the field of teaching, and in this they are inevitably enthusiastic. of course, individuals differ in their approach and may in some cases be injudicious in their speech; this is to be regretted and dealt with as instances arise. but those who hear such persons, however much they may be stimulated by them, do also have the individual obligation to make judgments based upon their understanding of the Teachings, of the particular challenge at the moment, and of their circumstances, and should make their decisions accordingly.

As important as it is for parents to exercise their moral authority in assisting the youth not to make unwise decisions, it is also incumbent on the parents as bahá'ís to give due consideration to the significance of the spiritual impact of the faith upon the youth and recognize that the youth must have some latitude to respond to the stirrings of their hearts and souls, since they, beginning at the age of 15, must assume serious spiritual obligations and duties and are themselves alone ultimately responsible to god for the progress of their own souls. The capacity for mature thinking on the part of youth differs from one to the other and according to age; some attain this ability earlier than others; for some it is delayed. parents are generally in a position to judge these matters more acutely than others and must consider them in their attempts to guide the youth in their families, but the parents must strive to do so in such a way as not to stifle their children's sense of spiritual responsibility.141.7
