THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

1989-08-28

To all National Spiritual Assemblies dear b ahá'í f in addition to the accompanying letter addressed by the universal house of justice to the followers of bahá'u'lláh concerning the Nineteen day feast, we have been asked to convey its comments on the following points with which you will have to deal in assisting the community in its obser-vance of this important festival.

first, the house of justice is aware that in many areas only a limited time can be devoted to the feast by the friends, because the feast day may come during the week when most people have to work, and the evening hours do not allow much time for its observance. while the house of justice does not wish to deemphasize the preference expressed by Shoghi effendi that the feast be held on the first day of the bahá'í month, it feels that in instances of difficulty, where the friends would otherwise be unable to attend, the National Spiritual Assembly may point out to local Assemblies that it is permissible to hold the feast at another time within the bahá'í month, such as on a weekend.

1□7Second, the administrative portion of the feast should not be laborious or burdensome. it can become so because too many reports by too many local bahá'í committees are presented at one feast. Such reports could perhaps be conveyed in bulletins. Also, there can be too many messages from agencies of the national administration. while it lies within the discretion of the National Spiritual Assembly to send a message or items of information to be shared at the feast, care must be taken not to overburden these events with a multiplicity of items from the National Assembly and its auxiliary agencies. Some National Assemblies have developed the practice of sending a message to every feast; this is, of course, not wrong in principle, but they may need to examine their methods of communicating with the believers and see whether occasional messages might not be sufficient. The idea is that the local bahá'í communities should exercise control over the feast and not be made to feel that they are being overrun by messages, instructions and assignments from the national administration of the faith. This whole matter needs to be studied by the National Spiritual Assembly with a balanced perspective, so that while important national issues are not ignored, the potentialities of the feast for development of the local community are fully realized.

Third, the accompanying letter to the friends points to the desirability of the inclusion in the feast of cultural elements which can enhance the experience without contravening bahá'í principles. The National Spiritual Assemblies will want to be watchful that the incorporation of such elements does not lead to a degeneration of the feast as a uniquely bahá'í institution and, particularly, that no objectionable customs and practices begin to creep into its observance.

we have also been asked to send you the enclosed compilation, entitled

The Nineteen Day Feast, educating the community and in answering the questions of the friends concerning this vital institution. you are free to share its contents with the friends but you are under no obligation to publish it.
